Mrs. Kohn died several years ago, and the youngest son, who had a life interest in the trust fund, died last February. Then the surviving heirs began proceedings for an accounting by Kohn. It was alleged that Kohn improperly transferred a $30,000 mortgage, and that $30,000 in cash was improperly invested. Mrs. Josephine Dewey, one of the heirs, claims also that Kohn secured $5,00 from her for investment for which he did not account.

An immediate accounting was demanded on Monday morning.

Kohn, alone, went to the Sturtevant House, where he was found on Wednesday with a builet hole in his right temple and a pistol by his side. His parthers hope to prove his innocence of wrong doing.

Prom an entirely authentic source it is learned that whatever the decision of the Court may be, the President will not call an extra session of Congress. Even should the decision declare the law wholly unconstitutional the President will adhere to his determination not to call Congress together and he will so announce in a public declaration.

Secretary Gresham minally surrendered and offered what seemed to be a modification of Sir Julian's demands, but what is in reality far in excess of that delighted individual's most exuberant expectations.

This is an authentic history of that notable transaction which a wilful and inquisitive Congress refused to raiffy. There are more than twenty bushels of documents in the State Department archives to prove it.

It is no wonder that Secretary Gresham has fled.

Secretary Gresham is not a successful administrative officer. Detail work is distasteful to him. When he was Postmester-General he would never go into the details of the Department, and several orders are on record there which were so thoroughly impractical as to have created endless confusion in the attempt to carry them out.

Several diplomatists in Washington were quick to discover Secretary Gresham's weak point, and proceeded to take advantage of it by flooding him with papers, documents, statements, quibbles and exasions without limit. In each has gone against the United States.

The mean time, earnings of roads in various sections are improving, and the residence in Washington, and there are exclusive circles at the Capital where the Spanish diplomatist is coldly greeted.

mansion, now occupied by Senator Brice, without a grimace and a tendency to limp.

The Spanish Diplomatic Corps is trained after the best European model. In the Spanish Legation at Washington the ablest member is Senor Don Jose Felipe Sagrario, the First Secretary. Senor Muruaga is the politician. He owes his appointment to political influence, as the average American Minister does. Only in Madrid there are Castilian Mrs. Hanksbees, whose influence makes and unmakes Ministers as well as Ministries. The handsome Spaniard is a bachelor. He thinks Byron's "Don Juan" the greatest poem ever written.

There are members of the Spanish American legations who have unpleasant remembrances of Muruaga. When the Pan-American conference was in session the Union League Club gave a grand reception to the delegates, and the whole Diplomatic Corps was invited. Muruaga attended, and it is alleged that his companions could not be presented. Several delegates, with their wives, left in high indignation. The Union League succeeded in suppressing all reference to the matter, but had the scandal been cailed officially to the attention of the State Department, Muruaga would have followed in the footsteps of Caiacazy, the Russian Minister who scandalized Washington in 1871.

The Spanish Minister's main duty 's a political one. He bandles the enormous Secret-Service fund which is used in this country to thwart and betray a cuban revolutionary movements. A Spanish Minister committed suicide in Washington some years ago. Among this papers were some which indicated that he had received a quarter of a million dollars for this purpose. Cuban sympathizers claim that the fund which Muruaga now controls for this purpose is even larger.

Trying to Tell Her Father.

Rock Says She Slapped Him and Bit Him on the Knee.

Lizzie Lundborg, twenty years old, of 233 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, the story of whose remarkable infatuation for Kate Newell, a domestic formerly in the employ of the Lundborgs, was told in "The Evening World" Dec. 5 last, was complainant in the Harlem Police Court this morning.

She and her mother appeared against Gregory frequently asked her to come back to him, and threatened to kill her. Last evening Mrs. Gregory visited her sister, Mrs. John Martin, at 423 Eighth avenue. While Mrs. Martin was absent Gregory called. He went directly to the room where his wife and three children were sitting and begged her to return home with him. She refused, and asked him to leave the house. Gregory then drew a revolver and shot the woman in the head. She fell, and her thirteen-year-old daughter, putting her hand over the wound, implored the longshoreman not to shoot again.

Gregory was deaf to her entreaties, and fired two more shots, one of which took effect. Then he ran downstairs and escaped before the police could be summoned.

The wounded woman was taken to a janitor, Frank Rock, charging him with having tried to break in the door of their flat. After Miss Lundborg had been discharged last December from Bellevue Hospital, where she had been examined as to her sanity and pronounced sane, she promised her father, Charles G. Lundborg, who is a retired marine arfriendship for Kate Newell forever. Mr. Lundborg, however, told the jani-tor to inform him if at any time his an interview with his daughter.

Last Wednesday night, shortly after 9 o'clock, the janitor heard Miss Lundborg call down the dumbwaiter shaft:
"Come up, dearle, darling, lovie."
When Rock saw Kate Newell at the bottom of the shaft he started upstairs to find Mr. Lundborg, who occupied the top floor.
When half way up the janitor said he was struck in the face by Lizzie's seventeen-year-old brother John.
In the hall of the top flat were Kate Newell and Lizzie Lundborg, Miss Newell, he said, was dreased in black tights and had a loose ulster thrown over her shoulders.

As Rock was about to ring the bell of the Lundborg flat. Kate Newell, he declares, struck him in the face, and when he pushed by her to get to the door leadling to Mr. Lundborg's room, she bit him in the Knee. At the same time Mrs.
Lundborg obstructed his passage.

Mr. Lundborg is somewhat deaf, and failed to hear the noise in the hall.
The janitor was finally driven back, and the next day Mrs. Lundborg and her daughter obtained a summons for the janitor's appearance in court.

Justice Weide, after hearing the testimony, promptly discharged the defendant.

He was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital a prisoner.

At the hospital it was said that Gregory's chances for recovery were very slight. One of the bullets penetrated his left lung, and two are in his chest, but have not yet been located.

When Patrolmen Brown and Maxson, who had been searching for him all night, arrived at his room in the Hudson street house he was undressed and in bed. When he saw the officers he said:

"Well, I suppose you're after me, but you'll have to call a carriage, for I can't walk."

Then he showed his wounds, which he said were self-inflicted. He would not admit shooting his wife, but asked how she was. Or, being told she was not badly hurt, he said:

"Well, I've nothing to live for."

Gregory said that he shot himself somewhere on the street, where he didn't know, and he said he had thrown the pistol away. None of the Ryan family, where he lived, heard him come in or neard any pistol shots during the night. The knife cut is on Gregory's left wrist and is slight.
